Social Security SNAPSHOT...

Your Social Security number

The benefits you receive from Social Security are based on the earnings your employer (or you, if you are self-employed) reported using your Social Security number. So it is important that you always use the correct Social Security number. Also, you should make sure the name you use at work is the same as the name shown on your Social Security card. If you ever change your name, you should change your name on your Social Security card, too. Social Security does not charge for this service. You should get a Social Security number for your children as soon as they are born. You will need their numbers to claim them as dependents on your federal income tax return.

Identity theft

Be careful with your Social Security card and number to prevent identity theft. Show your card to your employer when you start a job so your records are correct. Then, put it in a safe place. DO NOT carry your card with you.

Social Security
SNAPSHOT...

Make sure your records are accurate

It is critical that your name and Social Security number on your Social Security card agree with your employer's payroll records and W-2 form so that we can credit your earnings to your record. If your Social Security card is incorrect, contact any Social Security office to make changes. Check your W-2 form to make sure your employer's record is correct and, if it is not, give your employer the accurate information.

You also can check your earnings record on your Social Security Statement. The Statement is available online to workers age 18 and older. To review your Statement, go to www.socialsecurity.gov/mystatement and create an account. If your Statement does not include all of your earnings, let your employer and Social Security office know about any incorrect information.
